Betty Harris is visiting Julia Ferguson in Appomattox.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Carter have returned from a visit to Williamsburg and Buckroe Beach. And when we arrived home, I recommended that he be relcassed on command." What was his crime? Carelessness of course!

Carelessness in the Christian life is the most dangerous of all. It means that we care less about our influence with others than about doing what we WANT to do. It means that we are losing our regard and our Love for the Lord. It means that the Church of Christ has lost its means, that we like Esau, have sold our birthright for a mess of pottage. The preacher's son arawered his father's scolding about carelessness by saying "Becareful for nothing" (Phil. 4:6) But we fail to listen to the rest of that verse in the Bible which says, "but in everything by prayer and supplication, let your request be made known unto God."

If we are slipping in our attitude towards God and His Church, and towards others, perhaps we would do well to take the approach offered by Paul in this passage of scripture.

In "everything" — that is all the areas and levels of life —we are to "make known to God" our desires. This, I think, will give muscle and power to faith. And of course the road of carelessness will be avoided by good deeds. good works, are a results of good relationships. These results are better established when we work at it. Carelessness has destroyed many lives and perhaps many nations. The setting of the flame which started a whole way has been by one person acting carelessly or irresponsibly. But diligence, a Christian virtue, can save many lives and nations. On all levels we must act with gravity and sincerity.

Be careful that you are found in God's favor during the dangerous shipping Him with your family.

Turning Point

Lesson for September 1, 1963

One of the strange stories in Genesis is this one of Jacob at the brook Jabbok. Are we expected to understand this story literally or figuratively? And if it is a literal story, was Jacob wrestling with an angel (Hosea 12:4), or a man (Genesis 32:24), or God Himself (Genesis 32:30)? If you had been there with a camera and a flash bulb, what could you have seen? The best thing to do with stories like that, hard for us to take full of and understand, is to ask one question about the story and stick to that. We have no doubt what the incident meant to Jacob. For him it was more than an incident, it was the high moment of all his life. "I have seen God face to face," he said; "and yet my life is preserved."

A Man Before and After

Last week we thought about the story of Jacob and Beth-el, and raised the question: was Jacob converted there? It does not seem likely, because Jacob at this time was more of a sharp dealer afterwards as he was before. He had been working for his uncle Laban, or around the years between the night at Beth-el and the night at Peniel (you notice Jacob named both places), and in all that time, while Laban was a tricky man to deal with, and cheated his son-in-law in various ways, it is clear that Jacob was taking Laban for a ride at the same time. Each one was trying to get some unfair advantage over the other. Observe also what he did the day before that fateful night at the brook Jabbok. He was about to meet his brother Esau, and though 20 years had passed since Esau swore he would kill his brother Jacob, Jacob feared Esau had not forgotten his bloodthirsty vow. So he sent some enormous presents ahead to make Esau feel better, and then he sent his family, and then he — stayed behind. A cheat and a coward both. But after that night of struggle, Jacob was a changed man. He goes out bravely in front of his family to meet Esau; and from that day on, while there was much sorrow in his later years, we do not hear of any more sins.

"By their fruits you shall know them," said Jesus, speaking of human beings as well as fruit trees and shrubs. Only God can see the heart, but neighbors and a man's family can see the life. Conversion affects the way a person talks and works and plays, it makes a difference with what it takes to make him happy. Conversion can no more be concealed, when it is real, than spring-time can be. Spring "bursts out" as we say; and so does conversion. But true conversion, such as we may believe Jacob's to have been, is not merely a change in behavior. It can be imitated by any one who can imitate or imitate the way converted people act; but the genuine can be told apart from the fake by the fact that the genuine conversion "stays put" while the fake breaks down when serious dangers or difficulties arise in the path. What makes areal conversion real? It is the fact that it is rooted in the inmost life, centered in and growing in and from the heart. God does not promise us good habits which will produce good hearts; He promises new hearts that will express themselves in good habits.

God's House or God's Face?

So the great turning points of life are those in which something vital and radical occurs in the inner life. Now we may ask: Why did this not happen at Beth-el and why did it happen at Pei-el? A clue to this may be found in those two words themselves. Beth-el means House of God an dPeni-el means Face of God. At the one place Jacob thought he had found (so to speak) God's front door. At the other place he met the God who has no doors, the God who comes to meet men in lonely and terrible places, the God whose goings cannot be scheduled and whose house not even the heaven of heavens can contain. A man may go to the house of God, yes, even to church, and not see God there at all. Most people are interested in their friends first and in their friends' houses second. Maybe the reason why there are so many not-quite converted people around is that so many of them think that just going to the "house of God" is enough. A Beth-el conversion is not enough.

THE MOST DANGEROUS CRIME — CARELESSNESS. A maxer in the air corps from the Philippines following World War II relates the most frightening load a transport plan with 40 men and left Layte. Shortly after take off I smelled gas fumes. Alerting everyone, I started looking for the trouble. What do you think I found? Back in the rear of the plane I discovered the chief himself washing his overalls with gas. He had taken the gas aboard in an air tight can, and had poured it out in a bucket. If someone had lit a cigarette, or the pilot had turned on his radio, I wouldn't have been able to tell this story. I ordered everything scrubbed, and the gasoline poured down the hatch. And when we arrived home, I recommended that he be relcassed on command." What was his crime? Carelessness of course!

Today, I can see a difference in this in the few homes that have no electric lights. Southside Electric Electric has literally saved the eyes of country people.

"Prior to this, the lamps, the Delcos, and the acetylene systems were dangerous. One of my patients was severely burned and today has scars from an acetylene light plant explosion at a Burkeville girls' school.

"To me, electricity is the cheapest essential commodity available to man, for we get more work in return for a dollar's worth of electricity than the benefits we have from any other dollar spent.

"If President Roosevelt's New Deal had done nothing else but father the rural electric program, that contribution to human life would have in itself made him a great man.

"I think rural people are well pleased with the rural electric service and I dare say you could take everything else away from them before they would give up electricity.

"To me, the advantage of television, operated, of course, by electricity contributes much to our understanding and progress.

"I give lots of credit to the members of the Southside Electric Cooperative and their united efforts in building the system to meet the needs as progress demands — and this has been well done under the policies laid down by its Board of Directors.

"Southside Electric Cooperative has been a guiding influence in the power supply business and has been an incentive to better service and cheaper rates.

"It seems to me that the very fact that Southside Electric Cooperative brought light when there was darkness is in itself sufficient reason for its being. It has kept step with progress, something of which we can all be proud, whether we are members or not."

Dr. Hamner, a native of Amelia, started practicing medicine on July 1, 1920 at Mannboro and has just passed his 43rd year in the same rural community practicing medicine. He attended Lynchburg College when it was known as Virginia Christian College, and received his medieal education at the Medical College of Virginia. He is a past president of the Medical Society of Virginia, a successful farmer, a prominent civic and political leader and one of the very few "country" doctors left in this area of Virginia. He can still mix his own prescriptions and does this when necessary.
